James Curry to Ozias Humphry

As poor Blake will not be out of need of money, I shall beg you to pay him for me, and to take the trouble when you return to town of having a box made for the prints . . . .

The “prints” may be a set of the Large or Small Book of Designs similar to the ones Blake had created for Humphry . . . .

For the last sentence substitute “The ‘prints’ might be proofs or an early copy of Blake’s Night Thoughts engravings (apparently published in November 1797), perhaps one of the sets Blake colored.”

2. According to Viscomi, “Blake’s ‘Annus Mirabilis’” 61, “Blake would not have had to work too quickly or worry too much if his colors dried to the touch on the support, because he almost certainly printed on dampened paper, whose moisture would have reconstituted the colors.”
3. The prints cannot be “a set of the Large or Small Book of Designs similar to the ones Blake had created for Humphry, probably the previous year,” for many of the prints in Small Book (B) were inscribed after Blake’s death by Frederick Tatham.

On 19 November 1828, William Twopenny, an antiquary and barrister, wrote to J. T. Smith:

My dear Sir,

Can you tell me where the Widow of Blake the artist lives.

Yours most truly

A review of Edmund Lodge’s Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain (London: William Smith, 1828) in the Times for 3 January 1829 went out of its way to discuss Blake’s Visionary Heads:

Closely associated with the desire of knowing the exclusive history of such [famous] personages, is the wish to be acquainted with their external appearance, and the fashion of

4. The letter, quoted from a reproduction of the manuscript in the Yale Center for British Art, is in an extra-illustrated copy of the second edition of J. T. Smith’s Nollekens and His Times (1829). The leaves are loose, and the extra-illustrations are numbered to indicate with which printed page they are associated—the Twopenny letter is number 474 (referring to the Blake biography in Smith’s book). Some of the extra-illustrations are annotated and signed by the great autograph collector William Upcott (e.g., nos. 58, 66), suggesting that the collection belonged to him.

Perhaps this was the copy of Smith’s book which, as he told Linnell in an undated letter (see BR[2] 490), had been “taken to pieces for illustration.” This seems to be the extra-illustrated copy of Smith sold in the Evans auction of William Upcott, 15-19 June 1846, lot 910 (“2 vol., unbound,” extra-illustrated “to 4 vol.”). It is probably not the copy of Smith [no date or edition identified] “loose in boards,” extra-illustrated to “9 vol.” with many letters, e.g., 4 from Blake to Ozias Humphry, not included in the 1846 sale or the Yale collection, which was in Sotheby’s auction of Joseph Mayer, 19 July 1887, lot 189.

and verify or correct the images which fancy has formed by the true copy which the art that confers immortality has preserved of them. The late Mr. Blake, the engraver, whose genius was subject to a kind of morbid excitement, was so possessed with this notion, that he hadcontracted a belief that he could, almost at will, bring before his actual physical eyesight the forms of the great men of this and other countries, whose existence he could only know by means of history. Under this delusion, which, however, was of no kin to madness, and could not have happened to any but a person of exalted imagination, he had frequent interviews with his distinguished buried acquaintance, and used to relate his imaginary conversations with them in perfect conviction of their truth and reality."

Miscellaneous References to "William Blake" in London, 1740-1830

oldbaileyonline.org> has records of William Blakes in London in the poet's time in roles as diverse as eel thief and victims of hat theft and murder. However, probably none of these William Blakes is the poet or was known to the poet.

Engraver (1748-c. 1817)
William Staden Blake not only "had a press with Charles and William Galabin at 1 Ingram Court, Fenchurch Street (1801)," but he also published at least two editions of a work printed at the Galabin Press:

Samuel Britchen, A Complete List of All the Grand Matches of Cricket That Have Been Played in the Year 1799; with a Correct State of Each Innings and the Articles of Cricket Inserted (London: Printed by H. L. Galabin, Ingram-Court, Fenchurch Street, for W. S. Blake, Change-Alley, Cornhill, 1799) 28 pp., 8°, and (1800) 44 pp., 8°. Other editions were produced by different printers and publishers.

Classical Scholar (c. 1785)
"William Blake," almost certainly not the poet, wrote his name repeatedly in an eighteenth-century manuscript translation of Sophocles's Ajax with learned notes in English, Latin, and Greek.9

New Contemporary References to William Blake after 1831
On 27 October 1843, the young Quaker Barclay Fox called on Linnell, a very clever painter. He showed us Blake's Illustrations of Dante done in the style of Campo Santo, a sort of mad genius, poor and gifted."10
